REBECCA JEWELL

REBECCA HOSSACK, W1

Jewell is a fascinating artist: having read social anthropology at Cambridge she went on to study natural history illustration for her PhD at the Royal College of Art and can now be found in the Oceania department of the British Museum as artist in residence. Her work absolutely reflects her love of the natural world – our feathered friends in particular – but with it, the careful, studied approach of an archivist. Exploring the cultures of collecting, museology and the migration of artefacts, this solo show will reveal six major works inspired by the British Museum's Oceania collections including a giant, hand-printed feathered egg – Jewell's intricate print work on feathers demands to be seen up close. Fitzrovia's Rebecca Hossack Gallery will host an evening of poetry reading on 12 April in response to the works, and as part of the collaboration with the gallery, the artist will also have a display in the west foyer of the British Museum's Clore Centre from 5 to 31 April. 28 Charlotte Street, W1 (020 7255 2828; rebeccahossack.com)
