

9. Rebecca Hossack Gallery

Innovation, individuality, energy and excellence are the watchwords at the Rebecca Hossack Art Gallery, which has two locations in London, including one in the heart of Soho (plus another in New York). With the first opening a quarter of a century ago, all three outposts remain hugely popular – all the more impressive in an industry where galleries come and go like ships in the night. A great champion of Non-Western artistic traditions, the eponymous owner brings a truly global outlook to her galleries, evidenced in the fact that she lays claims to the first art gallery in Europe to exhibit Australian aboriginal painting. Today she continues to offer a platform for artists across the world – and the Soho gallery, like all of her venues, is a wonderful space for art lovers to come and visit.
