AUSTRALIA DAY DINNER

The Flight Gallery in the Science Museum in Kensington was an appropriate venue for the 1995 Australia Day Dinner, which also celebrated the 75th anniversary of Australia's national airline, Qantas.

Co-hosting the dinner was Mr Peter Roennfeldt from Qantas UK and Miss Pia Byrne, from the Australian Tourist Commission, who announced the Commission's Year Of Art and Culture campaign, which will promote international awareness of the arts in Australia.

Bonus entertainment for the 250 guests was an after-dinner speech by Richard Wilson, star of the hit TV series One Foot In The Grave, during which he made some amusing observations about a recent trip he had made to the Northern Territory while filming for a TV holiday programme.

Meanwhile, earlier the same day in Australia, Prime Minister Paul Keating announced veteran artist Arthur Boyd Australian Of The Year, a choice which delighted Rebecca Hossack, the recently appointed Cultural Development Officer at the Australian High Commission in London.
